This summer in le Muy, the Venet Foundation hosts Mexican artist Stefan Brüggemann for his second solo exhibition in France, entitled "Inside Out," curated by Jérôme Sans. With his newest show, Brüggemann bends the definition of a canvas, painting directly onto the gallery's glass windows—the first of its kind in the space. With his worded spray paint, the artist built an exploration of the power of language, oversaturated information, and knowledge.

In addition to his spray paint, Brüggemann presents ready-made style stainless steel doors that lead to nowhere. One door, placed inside the central gallery, mimics a fire exit, toying with the distinguishing features between real and fake. With "Inside Out," Brüggemann prompts viewers to reflect on the frameworks through which we interpret existence and truth.

What we love: Since Brüggemann sprayed his pieces directly onto the gallery's structure, the painted exhibition is a unique installation within the artist's vast repertoire.
